

CONTENTS

	PAGE
Foreword by Bernard Darwin	vii
Preface by 'A Keen Hand'	xi

1 HISTORICAL SKETCH OF THE GAME

Antiquity of the game—Roman Paganica—British game of Bandy-ball—description of Clubs—origin of the term Golf—the pastime during the reign of James I—Golfing law of James II—probable epoch of the introduction of the game into Scotland—old golfing-links not identical with the modern—St Andrews Links inundated—-anecdote of Charles I—predilection of James II for the game—description of the French Jeu de Mail—institution of golfing clubs

1

2 THE MODERN GAME

Remarks on the difference between the ancient and modern practice of the game—gutta percha balls—the effect they produced—career of the old feather balls and their construction—the Scottish links noticed—the spreading popularity of the sport—description of a golfing course—remarks on public ground spoiled for golfing—the manner of playing the game—code of golfing laws referred to 8

3 CLASSIFICATION OF CLUBS

Variety and number of golfing clubs commented on—golf compared with billiards—clubs divided into four genera—DRIVERS considered generally and specifically—the functions of play-club and grassed driver shown—the predicaments in which they are severally used—WOODS, the origin of their name—sub-division into four species—these different clubs considered and their functions illustrated and contrasted—origin of the term 'bafter'—the niblick noticed—remarks on its use—why superseded—IRONS, why so named—sub-divided into three members—these described, and their several functions alluded to—derivation of the term click or cleek—PUTTERS embrace two species—these clubs described and their various uses illustrated—the iron putter alluded to—illegitimate use of driving putters—concluding remarks

15

CONTENTS

PAGE

4 GOLFING MANNERISMS

Remarks on the confusion and multiplicity of styles of golfing — the art cannot be acquired in a variety of ways — causes of this want of unanimity in the practice of the game — career of the Novice — how he is assisted by his caddie — injurious to his style — no existing diffa concerning the practice of the game — remarks thereon — peculiarities in the make of clubs — their origin — a serious obstacle to a golfing system — players not all alike in bodily organisation — to what extent this necessitates difference in style — players divided into two great classes, Agiles and Non-agiles — these terms explained — remarks on the plan of the succeeding pages in reference to this classification — difference of stature affects neither style nor clubs

20

5 CHOICE OF CLUBS

An important step — the clubs taken seriatim — DRIVERS — the shafts and heads of the play-club and grassed driver described — certain qualities recommended — supple and stiff shafts contrasted — the arched back to a driving shaft condemned — broad and deep-faced heads considered — their use not advisable — illustrations — weight of driving heads — should depend on the shaft — caution against too much lead — the lie of driving clubs treated of — maxim — thick grasps animadverted on — the driving clubs of non-agiles commented on — why they probably acquire such drivers — the supposed necessity for a difference in the driving clubs of non-agiles considered — no other clubs susceptible of material alteration — SPOONS, considered at length — their heads, shafts, lie, weight, and curve commented on, and illustrated — IRONS, their shafts particularised — the method of getting a fitting iron-head — the lie and curve considered — the old round-head iron noticed — why objectionable — the driving cleek — its length of shaft — PUTTERS — difficulty of recommending a particular kind — reasons for this — putter-monstrosities — driving and green putters minutely treated of — their lie, weight, shafts, heads, etc., — curving back recommended — narrow and deep faces recommended — danger of using iron putters — the woods employed in club making — remarks thereon — length of clubs

25

6 STYLE OF PLAY

Introductory remarks — advantages of a correct style — billiards a parallel — skill not strength makes the golfer — a familiar illustration

ii

CONTENTS

PAGE

the Arabs of the Links good examples — Golfing all an art — vagaries in style of non-agiles failures — the classification of Golfers previously adopted necessitates no difference in kind of style — slight differences noticed — DRIVING — remarks on brilliant long driving — position of striker minutely detailed — illustrated by diagram — the muscles should play loosely before the swing — the proper grasp of the driver detailed — the right hand should direct the motion given by the left — erroneous ways of grasping the club shown to be theoretically false — preliminary remarks on the swing — taking aim — should not be over-done — the true driving-swing should be circular — this motion demonstrated to be the correct one — illustrated by a diagram — the posture of the golfer in taking a swing — the eye should be steadfastly fixed on the ball — the swing described — the upward and downward sweep — remarks on a correct swing — an easy method to acquire it — style of driving with grassed drivers, long and middle spoons noticed — mode of handling these clubs for less distance than is possible to be done — jerking play explained — when useful — with what clubs it is to be attempted — the jerking swing set forth — abuse of this style of play — SHORT SPOONS — their swing — BAFING SPOON — its function alluded to — its peculiar swing detailed — position an object in using this club — IRONS — not unscientific tools — the only predicaments in which strength is available — how to extricate the ball in such cases — swiping with the driving iron explained — the reason why players shy this club — the cleek ubiquitously useful — requires no special remarks as to its swing — how to decrease the ratio of elevation with an iron club — caution — PUTTING — position different — grasp nearly the same as in driving — advantages of the posture recommended — should be done off the wrist — errors in this respect exposed — no preliminary aim should be taken — in driving — the swing of the driving putter — when used against the wind — concluding remarks

36

7 POINTS OF THE GAME

What should be attended to that the game may be really enjoyed — disasters of inexperience — the novice golfeth in the dog-days — advice in the matter of dress — the old Scottish club uniform scrutinised — reason of the crimson colour — an experimental match — going off — tiring the ball — remarks thereon — no tee when swiping in the wind's eye — driving from off a declivity — the golfer should play

iii

CONTENTS

PAGE

according to the wind and the state of the course—advice on this latter point—how the golfer should follow his ball—the golden mean in golf—hesitation in the choice of a club commented on—examples given—should be overcome by cool reflection and calculation—prudence not always the better part of golfing—the finesse of the game—the practice of oldsters—open swiping considered—wild driving—drawing and hitting off the heel—their causes and cures—hanging balls—how played—the names of the club are in many cases good guides to determine which to use—the quarter stroke—the baffing spoon and light iron compared—the advantages of this last club—playing iron strokes over a hazard on to the putting green—method of effecting them—stimy explained—how to play them with the iron, and when—how and when with the wooden putter—the former the best tool—when the ball should be lofted direct into the hole—another method of playing stimies with an iron—worth trying for experiment—a twist useful in putting on rugged greens—maxims in putting—always be up in the long put—putting exclusively with an iron tool commented on—caution in this respect—the policy of the game to be considered in putting—instances—meaning and use of a guide—how putted—short-holes—description of them—their use to the novice—how they are generally holed—not advantageous with respect to the regular game—alteration of clubs animadverted on—advice thereon—leather faces noticed—their drawback in wet weather—the weight of golf balls—the player should have both light and heavy—medium size, 28—large balls good for putting—should be painted red in snow—golfing in sand requires no peculiar notice

49

8 MATCH-PLAYING

Introductory remarks—various kinds of match-games—foursomes—threesomes—singles—advice in playing a single—the players should be equal without odds being required—this illustrated—in unequal matches great resolution required to play coolly—excitement—its causes—betting—employing strength for skill—over anxiety to accomplish great strokes—pressing thus superinduced—the term explained—strength unnecessary where style is correct—pressing wrong in principle—excitement liable to influence the short-game—coolness enforced—luck of the green—instances—the player should not be irritated by it—never give up a hole—indecision should be mastered

iv

CONTENTS

PAGE

—a little theory better than advice from caddies—the reason why—advantages of a single to a novice—odds—the term explained—two ways of giving odds—holes to start with objectionable and deceiving—this demonstrated—coolness essentially necessary in a match where odds are given—this explained—threesomes—resemble a single closely—the policy of the game more complicated—why beginners should eschew threesomes—method of counting strokes explained—a suggestion for scoring in three-handed matches—foursomes necessitate a harmony in purpose and execution between two partners—what constitutes the best foursome—a great help to the novice—command of temper enjoined on foursome players—why—foursomes are favourite matches with oldsters—medal days—no criterion of a golfer's skill—the reason wherefore—description of the course on a medal-day—suggestions for playing on such occasions—extreme caution a mistake how outsiders occasionally come in first—players should be as evenly matched as possible on medal-days—pressing to be avoided, and the iron clubs never to be handled if possible

60

9 CONCLUSION

General remarks on the abiding pleasures of Golf—the sprite of the green addressed—the author relates his experience—his first club—how he used it—the school versus the Links—the latter victorious—moral thereanent—his reverence for the sublimities of the game—an eulogium on its invigorating pleasures—the invalid—the artisan—suggestion for the conversion of barren heaths into golfing greens—likewise a hint to country gentlemen—the author inclineth to do a little chivalry—and challenges the pretensions of cricket—why cricket is so popular—how the Links were acquired of old—the oral conveyance—the author mourneth that such grants continue not—his experience of cricket—his stern allegiance to golf—the enjoyment of a quotidian round touched upon—a cloud of witnesses brought to attest the healthful properties of the game—conclusion

68

Summary of Technicalities

73

APPENDIX

Table of Golfing Laws

75

Table of Scottish Golfing Clubs

80

v